

Getting Organisations to License LearnPulse

This is a working guide, not a script to read verbatim — adapt the wording to how you actually talk. The goal of every first contact is one thing: get a 20-minute demo call booked with a decision-maker. Don't try to close on outreach — try to get the conversation started.

1. WHO TO TARGET

PERSONA	WHERE THEY SIT	WHAT THEY CARE ABOUT
L&D Manager	Mid-size to large corporates (100+ staff)	Measurable upskilling outcomes, low admin overhead, cost vs. Coursera/Udemy Business
HR Director	Companies without a dedicated L&D role	"AI readiness" as a board-level talking point, retention, low-friction rollout
Training Institution / Bootcamp Owner	Private colleges, bootcamps, online academies	Adding an AI curriculum without building it themselves, reselling/bundling it into their own offering
Government Skills Agency	Ministries, TVET authorities, public training bodies	Cohort-scale rollout, certification that's independently verifiable, procurement-friendly pricing

Existing relationships beat cold outreach every time — if you know someone in any of these functions, start there before prospecting strangers.

2. WHERE TO FIND THEM

- LinkedIn: search job titles "Head of L&D", "HR Director", "Talent Development Manager" filtered by company size 100+; look for people posting about AI adoption, upskilling, or digital transformation — that's a warm signal, not a cold one.
- Training/bootcamp directories: most countries have a public list of registered training providers — these are ready-made resellers, not just buyers.
- Government tender portals: skills/training tenders are often public and tell you exactly who's buying and when.
- HR/L&D community events and WhatsApp/Slack groups: often more effective than cold email for a first warm intro.

Subject: Cutting your AI training cost per seat by ~90%

Hi [Name] — most AI training I see companies buy (Coursera/Udemy-style) runs $300–400 per seat, per year, and it's mostly video-watching. LearnPulse is hands-on: your team practices real prompt-engineering and AI-tool tasks, gets scored instantly by AI, and earns a verifiable certificate — priced one-time, not annual. Worth a 20-minute look for [Company]'s [team/dept]? Happy to send a free demo login either way.

LinkedIn DM (after they engage with your comment or post)

Hi [Name] — saw your post on [topic]. We help companies get their teams AI-ready with hands-on, AI-graded practice rather than another video course. If it's useful, I can send a free trial login so you can see it before we talk numbers — no pressure either way.

Cold call opener

"Hi, this is [You] — quick one, not a pitch: are you currently running any AI or prompt-engineering training for your team, or is that still on the to-do list?" (Then listen. Let their answer decide the next sentence, don't launch into features.)

4. COMMON OBJECTIONS & HOW TO HANDLE THEM

OBJECTION	RESPONSE
"We already use Coursera/Udemy."	"Good — most of our licenses replace exactly that, because it's one-time not annual, and it's hands-on grading instead of video completion rates." Ask what completion rate they're actually seeing today — it's usually low, and that's the opening.
"Sounds expensive."	Reframe to per-seat, one-time: at $35–65/seat one-time vs. $300+/seat/year elsewhere, it's a cost conversation you want to have, not avoid. Offer the free intro module as proof before any commitment.
"Our staff aren't technical."	That's who it's built for — no coding required for the prompt-engineering and AI-tools tracks; it starts from zero.
"We need to see it work first."	Every user gets a free intro module automatically — offer to set up 3–5 trial seats from the org's real team before they sign anything.
"Who's behind this / is it legitimate?"	Point to the certificate verification page (">learnpulse.online/certificate/<number>) and offer a live demo call — nothing beats letting them click through it themselves.

5. THE ASK

Every conversation should end with one of these three outcomes, in order of preference:

1. A 20-minute demo call booked with the decision-maker.
2. 3–5 trial seats set up for their team to test.
3. A warm intro to whoever actually owns the training budget.

Don't try to quote exact pricing or close the deal yourself in the first message — that's what the demo call is for. Your job is to get the conversation started and qualified.

6. REPORTING & COMMISSION

- Log every prospect you contact (org name, contact, date, outcome) — this is how commission on a closed deal gets attributed to you.
- Commission is 10% of the closed license value, paid once the client's payment clears.
- Loop in hello@learnpulse.online as soon as a prospect is ready for a demo or pricing conversation — pricing negotiation and contracts are handled centrally, not by you directly.
